RALPH strolled toward his cabin —his and Myron's. What a night! He'd been walking for hours along the cliffs by the water. That pungent smell of sea and sage—he was fairly drunk with it; and there lay Myron, sound asleep on their first night in California. Some guys could sleep through anything. But Myron was still pretty weak after that last illness.

Ralph glanced at his watch. Two A. M.; pretty late. "I'll creep in quietly and not disturb him," he thought. Second cabin from the right; he could see it through the trees, the door ajar.

Now he was at the door, pushing it gently. Nary a squeak. Good. He removed his shoes and went in. Myron was a shapeless mound upon the farther cot—breathing regularly. He could just discern him by the light that filtered in. Tiptoe around the bags—what a break that he'd remembered where they were. Pajamas? He pawed around the foot of the bed—nothing doing—well . . . The bedside chair—so far—so good. He pulled off his clothes and slid into the empty cot.

Dawn was breaking when he became conscious of a weight against his chest.

"Say—how many beds do you need?" he growled, throwing off the other's outlying arm. The next moment he drew back his hand as though he'd burned it. Barely six inches away, was the prettiest girl he'd ever seen—and she was about to scream! In a flash he had her in a grip of steel, one hand pressed over her mouth. Helpless—she glared at him.

"Don't be frightened," he whispered fiercely. "I thought I was getting into my own cabin, with my brother. He's sick and I came in quietly so's not to wake him. If you yell, we'll be thrown out tonight; they won't wait for an explanation. Try to understand. Now, if you believe me and won't scream —nod your head twice." She did as he asked, though her eyes were blue daggers.

Then, abruptly, he released her and ducked wildly beneath his covers. "If you'll get into that closet," he suggested faintly, "I'll get out. I couldn't find my pajamas last night . . .

Now the girl was sitting up, slipping on a kimona. She gave him one withering glance as she made for the closet and he dressed to the accompaniment of her scornful laughter. Finally, stung by it: "I've been on my knees to you, darn you; just the same, your door was open."

Once outside, he looked around. There it was, three down. A natural mistake. They all looked alike. "With luck I can still make it without waking Myron." But Myron was very much awake, and in fine fettle.

• • • •

Soft lights — sweet music, and Nancy in his arms. "Did you ever see a dream walking?" She was a dream, dancing. When she was with someone else—he—stood by, content to watch and wait. He couldn't bear to break the spell. "Let's take a walk," he managed finally.

"You looked so funny when you scrunched down under the covers," she said, as though continuing an unbroken conversation. "But that was a dirty crack—about my door being open."

"I thought it would stop your laughing; otherwise you'd have roused the whole camp," he explained.

"Right—but you might have been gentler. I'm all bruised where you grabbed me."

"I'll remember that in future," he grinned. "You bruise easily." Suddenly a stinging blow caught him on the left cheek.

"See if you bruise easily," she snapped, turning back. He stood there, stunned with anger.

Before he could catch his breath, she was back. "I shouldn't have done that," she said, in a low, shamed voice, "you were nice about it all this morning when we were introduced. No wise cracks; no smirking. But I couldn't bear it if you took what happened lightly. You didn't really—did you?"

"Say," he cried, "hit me again! Of all the unmitigated asses, I'm the world's champion. And I think you're the most glorious girl in all the world."

Suddenly she was in his arms. After a while, she pushed him away, and looked at him, her large eyes probing. "We haven't known one another very long—have we?"

"All our lives," he assured her. "Why, the minute I laid eyes on you I knew you were the one and only . . ."

"Liar," she laughed, "you were too frightened to even look at me."

"Oh, was I," he snorted. "You had on the snappiest pink pajamas I ever saw . . . but you might have been gentler," mockingly— "I'm black and blue where you socked me (but not and make it well) and while we're about it, how soon could we be married? I've a good job and a few assets."

"Silly, wait till we're acquainted."

"We've two weeks here, haven't we? And all eternity after that. Goodness, it hurts where you—mum, that's better."

CARE OF POULTRY VITAL IN SUMMER

Special Measures Necessary To Protect Flocks.

By C. F. PARRISH

The health and egg production of the poultry flock next fall will be in proportion to the care given the pullets this summer.

One of the first "musts" in the grower's program should be the providing of clean ground not used by poultry for at least two years to range the pullets.

Then, too, an open air summer range shelter should be located in a corn or soybean field, orchard, lespedeza pasture, or some other location where ample green feed and shade are available.

An ample supply of tender green feed will cut the feed bill greatly, as well as result in a more healthy flock. Soybeans planted in rows or in corn make an ideal shade and source of green feed during hot dry weather. It is also important that the pullets have plenty of fresh water available in a cool, shady place at all times.

At least once a day, in the late afternoon, the pullets should be fed liberally on whole yellow corn and whole oats. Also the birds need a high quality growing or developing mash. Many of the more successful poultrymen keep whole oats and whole yellow corn in hoppers before the pullets as well as a hopper of mash.

Of course, liberal feeding of whole oats, corn, and green feed will retard the sexual maturity of the pullets to a certain degree, but this is to the advantage of the poultryman since the birds will have more time to become better developed. This will mean larger eggs.

Farming Advanced By New Machinery

Trend in farm machinery toward durability, simplicity, speed, and convenience of operation, says W. M. Hurst of the United States bureau of agricultural engineering, "probably has affected American agriculture as much as, if not more than, development of the reaper and steel plow a century ago."

The gas tractor has been on the market for nearly 40 years. But only during the past 10 or 12 years has a unit suitable for planting and cultivating row crops, for plowing, disking, and belt work, been available. Of all general-purpose tractors manufactured in 1937 nearly 50 per cent were on rubber. Pneumatic tires not only permit higher speed in field operations but make possible road hauling with trailers.

"Adapting field machinery to use with tractors," says Mr. Hurst, "constitutes the major recent development in what is generally known as farm implements. A new plow, for instance, may look about the same as its predecessor, but on examination it will be found to be made of better material, to have greater beam clearance for turning under trash, the shape of the moldboard of some is such as to permit higher speed, and attachments are available for increasing effectiveness in turning under cover crops."

Home-Raising of Foods Is Good Farm Practice

Home production of dairy and poultry products, fruits, vegetables, and meat from animals fed and butchered on the farm offers a two-way advantage to families with low cash incomes, the new department of agriculture yearbook points out. Home-grown foods usually improve the diet—both in quality and quantity—and they release for other purposes money that would otherwise be paid out for food.

In a recent survey of living costs on farms, food economists of the United States department of agriculture were able to group 94 families—each of which had about $630 a year to spend for the family living, and each consisting of a husband and wife and one child under 16 years of age—on the basis of how much food was produced on the farm.

Money expenditures for food dropped steadily as home production increased. Some of these families produced more than $400 worth of food on the farm and spent only about $180 for food. At the other end, part of the families raised only about $100 worth of food and bought about $200 worth. The economists estimate that such a family would spend about $285 cash if it did not raise any food. Families producing the highest money values in food were in general the best fed.

Spout Spring

Spout Spring, June 25.- Last Saturday afternoon about 5:30 P. M. a crowd of friends gathered at the home of Miss Susie P. Davidson and gave her a surprise birthday party. Prayer was offered by Mr. A. M. Goodman and a toast was given by Mrs. W. E. Dickerson, after which a picnic supper was served on the lawn. Miss Sue was presented with a lovely house coat as a token of their expression of appreciation of her usefulness in the community. Everyone present enjoyed the occasion very much and wishes Miss Sue many more happy birthdays.

Misses Margaret and Jack Cyrus are spending the week with their sister, Mrs. Ben Garrett at Richmond.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Moon and family visited relatives in Lynchburg Sunday.

Mrs. A. L. Richardson of Lynchburg is spending some time with her daughter, Mrs. Clyde Sunday.

The Pneumarcke Society will meet Sunday night at the Baptist church at 7:30 P. M. The Blue Clan will have charge of the program. They will present a play entitled A Journey of a Thousand Miles. Everyone is invited.

The Spout Spring Girl Scouts held their meeting Saturday at the Baptist church. As the captain was absent, Mac Webb presided. Scripture was read by Mac Webb. The Lord's Prayer was repeated by all. Roll call, each answering with a Bible verse. Laws, Wachword and Promise and Motto were said. Bible stories were told by Mac Webb, Mary Martin, Dot Martin and Florence and Mary Layne. Games were played. —Frances Martin, reporter.

Clip Pastures Now to Destroy Weeds and Provide New Growth

Spare the mower and spoil the pasture. Permanent pastures should be clipped with a mowing machine this month, states W. H. Byrne, Virginia agricultural extension economist.

Clipping in June serves a twofold purpose, he says. Some of the pasture plants may have reached the heading-out stage, becoming tough and unpalatable, and clipping will stimulate a fresh nutritious growth of grass to provide grazing late in the season. The second purpose is eradication of weeds.

NEW LAWS IN EFFECT

Among laws enacted by the 1940 General Assembly which became effective June 22 are the Bridge-Ferry Act, giving the State Highway Commission authority to turn special toll bonds of 1934 the proceeds to purchase and operate certain bridges and ferries, and the bill to prohibit the block payment of poll taxes.

TELETYPE NETWORK OPENS

The Virginia State Police teletype system was inaugurated by Govenor Price June 21, with a message flashed from State police headquarters near Richmond and responses wired from the 14 other stations on the state-wide hook-up.

Virginia is the first state in the South and the eighth in the nation to adopt a state teletype system. With the State's new radio system, Virginia now has one of the most modern and efficient police communication networks in the United States police officials said.

Lines of the teletype system radiate from a headquarters 10 miles west of Richmond to Alexandria, Newport News, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Staunton, Harrisonburg, Winchester, Covington; Roanoke, Lynchburg, Suffolk; Portsmouth Norfolk and Petersburg. Appomattox and Culpeper will be included in the network shortly.

Inauguration of the system marks a progressive movement looking to the protection of the life and property of Virginia residents, Governor Price said in his dedicatory message.

"Build-Up" Relief Explained to Women

A simple method has saved many women a lot of suffering.

It is based on the fact that headaches, nervousness, cramp-like pain are often symptoms of functional dysmenorrhea due to malnutrition.

Help for this condition so often follows the use of CARDUI, because it usually increases the appetite and the flow of gastric juice; thus aids digestion and helps build physical resistance. Usual result is less periodic distress.

Many who take CARDUI a few days before and during "the time" have found this helps ease periodic discomfort. Women have used CARDUI for more than 50 years!

VETERANS OFFER SERVICES

Richmond, June 26.- Governor James H. Price has referred an offer by the Veterans of Foreign Wars to serve in any capacity for defense, and a proposal by Colonel Marion S. Battle, chief of the Division of Motor Vehicles, that veterans be used as home guards, to the Virginia Defense Council.

The Virginia Veterans of Foreign Wars offer of service was communicated to the Governor by Samuel B. DeVaughan, State Commander of the veterans' organization, following action taken at the eighteenth annual encampment of the V.F.W. at Roanoke.

A number of other proposals for formation of a State defense force in case the National Guard is called into Federal service, have been advanced. One plan would organize thousands of minute -men, armed with 12-guage shotguns. Ammunition is available in private stores, it was pointed out, and little training in marksmanship would be needed.
